A crowd of people gathered outside the courthouse in Tulsa, Oklahoma, in June 1957, to witness the burial of unusual time capsule: Plymouth Belvedere car. The city leaders explained: " In exactly 50 years' time, this car will be unearthed to show the world who we were and how we lived"

The automobile contained a flag, a city phone directory, unpaid parking ticket, and the contents of a woman's purse. Five gallons of gas were also included, in case of the combustion engine became obsolete by 2007.

The event attracted all sorts of people to Denver Avenue that day in 1957. Some thought that the idea was dumb; others thought it was brilliant. The person to guess the approximate population of Tulsa in 2007 would win.

The Plymouth was wrapped in protective materials and lowered into a concrete vault. On June 13, 2007, the vault was opened and the car was raised as thousands of people watched. The tomb was unable to protect the car from moisture. There was a bit of disappointment that the items were not in better condition.
